

Hebrew Lips

Author's Note: This poem was written out of a real-life experience, not as a play on words in the head. To me, it attempts to contain the strong tension that exists within Jews, which might also be a source of our energy, between the Tanach, and the language of Tanach. The same Tanach that treats our enemy in a severe manner and commands us to fight them to the bitter end, is written in the Holy language of Hebrew, in which there is no other word to use for a human being except for one that reflects and respects the image of God that is human: בן אדם - Son of Adam.

Stray dogs drag a piece of flesh to the side of the road and lick its blood

I turn to the soldier beside me:

"Tell me, is this a ben adam?"

I ask as if Adam had only one son and this might be him.

It wasn't my intention to ask it this way;

And although I'm sure the ancient stories of Tanakh,
demanding revenge and redeeming blood,
that wish to jump from their pages and come to life[1] in this body of the fallen enemy that lies before me
were disappointed by my sensitive tongue,
My Hebrew lips left me no choice but to name him with words of honor that maintains the image of God.
He too
is one of the sons
Of Adam.

שְׁפָתַיִם עֵבְרִיּוֹת

כְּלָבִי רְחוּב גָּרְרוּ רִקְמַת בְּשָׁר לְצַד הַדָּרֶךְ
וַיִּלְקוּ דָּמָה,
פְּנִיתִי לַחֲזִיל שְׁלֻצְדֵי:
תִּגִּיד, זֶה בֶּן אָדָם?
שְׁאֵלְתִי כְּאֵלוֹ לְאָדָם הָרֵאשׁוֹן
הִיָּה רַק בֶּן אֶחָד בַּלְבָּד
וְאוֹלֵי זֶה הוּא.
וְלֹא בְּכֹנֶה תַחֲלֶה שְׁאֵלְתִי כָּד,
וּבְטַח סְפוּרֵי תִנְ"ךְ עֵתִיקִים
טְעוּנֵי נִקְמָה וּגְאֻלַּת דָּם

שְׁבַקְשׁוּ לְצֵאת מִדְּפִיָּהֶם

וְלָרְקֵם עוֹד וְגִידִים

בְּגִיפַת הָאוֹיֵב הַמְרֻטָּשֶׁת לְפָנַי

הַתְּאֻכְזָבוּ מֵעֲדִינּוֹת לְשׁוֹנֵי,

אֲדָ שְׁפָתַי הָעֵבְרִיּוֹת לֹא הוֹתִירוּ לִי בְרָרָה

אֶלָּא לְכִנּוּתוֹ בְּשֵׁם שֶׁל כְּבוֹד

הַמְּשֻׁמֵּר צְלָמוֹ שֶׁל אֱלֹהִים.

אִף הוּא אֶחָד מִבְּנֵי

שֶׁל אָדָם.

[1] This Hebrew expression is based on Yechezkel 37:8, from the vision of the dry bones coming back to life: וַיֵּרְאֵתִי וְהִנֵּה-עַלֵיהֶם גִּידִים וּבָשָׂר עָלָה וּיְקָרָם עֲלֵיהֶם עוֹר מִלְמַעְלָה וְרוּחַ אֵין בָּהֶם: "I looked, and there were sinews on them, and flesh had grown, and skin had formed over them; but there was no breath in them." The expression literally translates to "flesh and sinews had grown," and is meant in modern Hebrew to mean to come back to life.
